

OVER €85M FOR YOUTH DEVELOPMENT

Revenue from the UEFA Champions League also benefits top division clubs that do not take part in the competition. Just over €85m of the UEFA Champions League revenue for the 2014/15 season is being redistributed to these clubs for use in youth development or local community programmes.

The €85m is made available for distribution via the professional leagues or the national associations.

The associations are divided into two categories for the purpose of these payments:

- associations with participants in the 2014/15 UEFA Champions League group stage (€71.1m);
- associations without participants in the 2014/15 UEFA Champions League group stage (€11m);

The first category comprises 18 national associations, who will each receive a minimum of €570,000, the same amount as last year. The second category comprises the 36 other national associations, who will each receive a minimum of €280,000, which again is the same amount as last year.

The amounts distributed vary depending on the value of the domestic TV markets of the UEFA member associations.

An additional payment (€2.9m in total) will be made to the 19 national associations that were represented in the play-offs.

In principle, the money should be shared equally between all the top division clubs concerned in each league or association. However, as this money is intended for youth development or local community projects, each club must have a youth development programme that complies with the requirements stipulated in the national club licensing manual accredited by UEFA.

Any exception to this rule is subject to the approval of UEFA, to whom the leagues/associations must provide detailed information on the payments made. •

Youth development is the primary objective of solidarity payments
